Yes, even we were surprised that Notting Hill, very possibly London's most famous suburb (thank you Julia and Hugh!) had gone so long without a hotel worthy of your precious Pounds. But The Laslett, found in that magical, hushed middle ground between Notting Hill Gate and the wonderful, if perennially packed Portobello Road, was worth waiting for. Inside the repurposed Victorian townhouse, thoughtful local touches—antique curios from Notting Hill dealer Jerome Dodd, Neal's Yard bath products, beat-up old Penguin paper backs on the bedside table—give it an appropriately home-style feel, while, should you choose to come out from under the cloud-like duvets, both Hyde Park and the neighborhood's excellent pubs and boutiques are right outside the 19th-century doors. Editor's Pick: Hot List 2016
